This allows everyone to join in the fun and improve their volleyball skills.

Clinics, training sessions, and tournaments are being developed in communities across the country. The REGION of USA Volleyball is highly committed to developing sitting volleyball locally and encourages you to join us at our upcoming events.

Vehicle Seat Heaters can Burn Paralyzed Occupants, Safety Group Warns

Paralyzed vehicle occupants are at risk of burns from seat heaters, said auto safety organization Safety Research & Strategies, Inc., in a February 22 letter urging the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA), which regulates safety standards, and the auto industry to change the standard for judging whether the heaters are defective.

Seat heater complaints are currently investigated only if the heater catches fire, despite reports of severe burns from seats that reached temperatures of 120 degrees or more—hot enough to cause third-degree burns in 10 minutes. Although most people feel the heat and turn the heater off, people with sensory deficits, including those with paralysis and neuropathy, often don't realize they've been injured until they see the burns later. Small children are also at risk because they don't always react quickly to discomfort.

"It doesn't take very long for people to get burned—it's remarkably fast," said Sean Kane, president of Safety Research. "Is this acceptable? Is this how we want to make a comfort feature? I think the answer is obviously no."

Safety Research wants NHTSA to follow the approach set by other agencies that enforce safety of heat-generating products by categorizing as defective all heaters with temperatures that exceed human tolerance levels, anything above roughly 110 degrees.

Many seat heaters have a temperature sensor that is supposed to stop heat conduction if the temperature reaches 105 degrees. But in some instances, the heater shuts down only if the temperature at the location of the sensor reaches that level. If the sensor area is below 105 but other parts of the electrical circuit are hotter, the heat stays on—sometimes reaching temperatures of up to 150 degrees, according to Arthur Johnson, who has represented clients burned by seat heaters.

Although there have been several recalls of seat heaters, they involved heaters that had the potential to catch fire. Kane charges that NHTSA has ignored claims related to excessive temperatures because only a small percentage of motor vehicle occupants have sensory perception problems that subject them to the burn risk.

Johnson said that people with paralysis have skin on their lower extremities that is extremely vulnerable to pressure sores and other injuries. Auto manufacturers and dealers have a responsibility to warn those at risk that the heat can be excessive, he argued.

"So much of their lives is spent in preventing a breakdown of skin, and then they get in a car, and there are no warnings that it's dangerous, and they get very serious burns," said Johnson. "Who would think that just a seat could burn you?"

Independent Living Rehabilitation Services

The Independent Living Rehabilitation Services (ILRS) program is a federally funded program through Title VII, Chapter I, Part B of the Rehabilitation Act.

Through this legislation, states are mandated to maximize leadership, empowerment, independence and productivity of individuals with disabilities by promoting a philosophy of independent living. This includes consumer control, peer support, self-help, self-determination, equal access and individual and systems advocacy.

The ILRS program is focused on providing four core services:

- Independent Living Skills training
- Information and referral to appropriate agencies or providers
- Individual and systems advocacy
- Peer support and counseling and/or mentoring

To be eligible, you must be a person with a significant physical, mental, cognitive or sensory impairment which substantially limits your ability to function independently within your family, your home and your community. There must be a reasonable expectation that ILRS will assist you to improve your ability to function, continue functioning or move towards functioning independently.

The ILRS program will accept referrals for individuals, who would like to achieve a self-directed and independent lifestyle.

Not everyone with a disability is eligible to receive services through ILRS, but no person will be denied the right to apply.

Service are time-limited and always directed towards achieving an independent living goal. Individuals who meet eligibility criteria work closely with an ILRS counselor to identify objectives in the areas of personal and/or home management or integration into the community.

Services are provided based on individual needs, independent living goals and available agency funding. Some services are subject to a determination of the consumer's financial needs. You or your family may participate in the associated costs, but it is not a requirement for receiving services. If you become an ILRS client, your ILRS counselor will work with you to develop your Independent Living Plan.

Call the District office that you reside in and staff will put you in touch with an Independent Living counselor for the Rehabilitation Services Administration (RSA) in your area.
